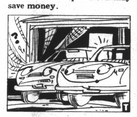
MANAGING YOUR MONEY

A SECOND CAR?

It may be cheaper not to own a second car, even if that means renting one occasionally, concludes a recent study.

With automotive price hikes and the rising cost of gas, automobile insurance and maintenance, alternate modes of transportation may save money.



The average base price of a 1978 American-made mid-sized car exceeds $4,200 before popular options are figured in. The annual fixed expense of owning such a car is $1,392, according to the study, which was made by Budget Rent a Car Corporation. This figure includes liability, collision and comprehensive insurance; license and registration fees; taxes and depreciation.

A typical three-year new car loan can add $137 a year in interest charges. These expenses occur whether the car is driven or not. Routine operating costs, including gas, oil and tires, amount to 6.65 cents per mile, raising total auto costs to $1,952 per year, over a 7,500-mile year. Other costs, such as garage storage, would be extra.

Using Budget Rent a Car's average rental, mileage and gas rates in 13 national population centers, the study compared the costs of owning a [illegible] with renting one. A family could rent a car for 65 days a year and drive 100 miles each day before exceeding the annual cost of owning a second car.

For people who occasionally need a station wagon or van, renting may make a lot of sense. These vehicles are expensive to maintain and they must be driven often to justify purchasing.

Right Windows Essential For Energy Conservation

Most American homeowners have the best intentions about energy conservation. But, they don't always know how to effectively cut fuel use.

For example: they may install extra wall and ceiling insulation and lower the thermostat, yet overlook the need for proper, insulating windows.

That's a serious oversight. As much as half the heat loss in an average home can be traced to uninsulated or poorly-insulated windows. Poor windows can also cause heating and cooling equipment to overwork, admit uncomfortable drafts, and encourage messy condensation.

Preventing these problems is simply a matter of using the right windows. That is, windows whose sash, frame and pane will not readily transmit heat. Wood windows with insulating glass and factory-applied weatherstripping meet the requirements. Here's why:

• Wood — which is made up of countless miniscule air pockets — is a natural insulator. Therefore, wood sash and frame retard the "flow" of heat in cold weather from inside the house to the outdoors.

• Insulating glass is actually two panes of glass with a cushion of air between. This cushion is a barrier to heat transmission, keeping warmth inside the house in winter and outside the house in summer.

• Weatherstripping insulates by preventing air infiltration through cracks around the window. Tight stripping seals out drafts and stops warm air from escaping.

A good insulating window also prevents condensation, which is caused by the "collision" of cold air with a warm window. In a weatherstripped wood window with insulating glass, temperatures are stabilized — the inside of the window stays warm, the outside cool. So, the "clash" conditions that lead to condensation do not occur.

Every home, new or remodeled, should have windows that help cut fuel bills. They are easy to find and available in all styles. Local lumber dealers and window distributors carry wood windows in stock sizes. Styles include: traditional doublehungs, conveniently operated casements, large bows and bays, sliding windows, sliding glass patio doors, and awnings and hoppers — which are often used in combination with fixed sash. All are pre-assembled units, ready to install. †

NEWS Of Women's Health

An Ounce Of Prevention Is Worth A Pound Of Cure

Interestingly, women need nearly twice as much iron in their diet as men do. Iron deficiency anemia, which can make you feel tired and listless, may often be avoided simply by adding iron-rich foods to your diet.

Before the onset of menstruation, some women experience premenstrual tension: mental and physical distress, accompanied by a general puffiness. These symptoms are related to retention of water in the tissue. Limiting salt intake the week before your period is sometimes an effective preventative.

One of the popular birth control products used by women is DELFEN® Contraceptive Foam. It is pure white, delicately scented and of feather-light consistency. Non-staining and non-greasy, it is almost totally undetectable in use.

A very important ounce of prevention for every woman is an annual Pap test. This is a simple and rapid method of detecting cervical cancer. The Pap test is generally performed during a routine medical or gynecological check-up.

Afraid of strangers? That particular phobia is called, "Xenjophobia."

LITTLE KNOWN FACTS

Parents need not worry, doctors say, about an infant sucking her thumb. It does not mean that the baby is under any unusual tension or frustration. Rather, it seems most frequently to be a simple gratification reaction.

* * *

Parents need not worry about transporting two children together. Now, double strollers can be found at Mothercare, retailing specialists for mothers-to-be, babies and children under five. Though it holds two in comfort, it weighs only 13 pounds and folds down to 41 by 12 by 7 inches.

* * *

Parents need not worry about increased crying in newborn babies. A recent study showed that the average amount of crying increases up to seven weeks of age and then begins a gradual decrease.

The first American song was reputedly "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free," written in 1759. The ditty was composed by Francis Hopkinson, a Declaration of Independence signer and a friend of George Washington.

For almost a song you can get fine, crafted stereo components, like the Realistic STA-2100 stereo receiver—Realistic's finest and most powerful receiver ever—at the thousands of Radio Shack outlets throughout the U. S.

"Summer Is I-Cumen In" is the earliest known piece of harmonized secular vocal music. It was written down, and probably composed, by John of Fornsete, an English monk, in the year 1240.

"The successful people are the ones who can think up things for the rest of the world to keep busy at."
